Parte B. RESUMEN LIBRE DEL CURRÍCULUM (máximo 3500 caracteres, incluyendo espacios en blanco)

María Basterrechea is Assistant Professor at the University of the Basque Country (UPV/EHU). She has belonged to the research group Language and Speech since 2010 (www.laslab.org/mariab), noted by the Basque Government (IT311-10, 2010-2015; IT904-16, 2016-2021) for excellence in research in the field. She holds an M.A. in Linguistics from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. She defended her Ph.D. in 2012 within the program "Language Acquisition in Multilingual Settings" from the UPV/EHU on "Interaction and Focus on Form in a Dictogloss Task in Secondary Education: A Comparative Study of CLIL and Mainstream Learner Production", supervised by Professor María del Pilar García Mayo, for which she received a Distinction Award (Premio Extraordinario de Doctorado). Her main areas of research enquiry have centred on Focus on form (Long & Robinson, 1998) and Interaction (Long, 1996) in Content-and-Language-Integrated-Learning (CLIL) contexts with adolescent and, more recently, with young learners. In particular, she has compared the production of Language-related episodes (LREs) (Swain & Lapkin, 1998) in English-as-a-foreign-language (EFL) and CLIL contexts. LREs are defined as excerpts of conversational interaction in which learners explicitly attend to formal aspects of language (including morphology, phonology, syntax or spelling) or to content (including meaning of words) while completing a given task. Her Ph.D. dissertation was the first attempt to establish a connection between content-based instruction and Task-based-language-teaching (see overview by Shehadeh, 2018). It also contributed to the field in the analysis of how those episodes found a reflection on a dictogloss task (Wajnryb, 1990), a meaning-focused writing task where learners first listen to an aural text, jot down notes and subsequently reconstruct the text collaboratively or individually based on their own notes. The results pointed to a correlation between the production of LREs and their reflection on the written task. CLIL learners were also found to focus on form to a greater extent than their mainstream counterparts. The results of this research have been published in Language Awareness (2019) (JCR, Q2), ITL-International Journal of Applied Linguistics (2015) (SJR, Q2), or chapters in edited volumes such as Second Language Interaction in Diverse Educational Contexts (John Benjamins, 2013), or Applied Linguistics Perspectives on CLIL (John Benjamins, 2017), among others.

As a member of language and speech (laslab.org) she has also worked in the area of oral interaction and LREs with young learners (a project granted by the Ministry of Economy and Competitiveness FFI2012-32212), an unrepresented population in the field of interaction. In particular, the study analysed primary school learners' (5th and 6th grades) use of communication strategies in oral interaction. The results of this research have been published in Language Teaching Research (LTR) (2019) (JCR, Q1), International Journal of Applied Linguistics (InJAL) (2020) (SJR, Q1), or ELIA Estudios de Lingüística Inglesa Aplicada (2017) (SJR, Q2). This line of research has also found its way in a Master's Thesis she has recently supervised within the MA programme Language Acquisition in Multilingual Settings (<http://www.lams.ehu.es>) with access to doctoral studies (PhD).

In a subsequent Project (FFI2016-74950-p) she worked on the effect of collaborative writing tasks on the production of LREs by primary-school learners (ages 10-12). One of the areas under study was the effect of task modality (oral task vs oral + written task) on the production of LREs in terms of a) amount, b) quality (form vs meaning-focus), c) resolution (i.e., whether the interactants resolve the LRE correctly, incorrectly, or no resolution is reached), and d) the incorporation of the LRE to the final outcome (oral or written), the latter being an underexplored area in the effect of LRE production. On the other hand, the effect of pair formation method (based on matched proficiency or student selection- based on students' own criteria) was analysed. Finally, drawing on Storch's (2002) taxonomy, pair dynamics (collaborative, expert-novice, dominant-dominant, dominant-passive) in these two cohorts was studied. It was found that it was proficiency-matched students who resolved a larger amount of LREs accurately, and also exhibited dynamics that previous research have shown to be more beneficial (collaborative and expert-novice). These results have been published in Studies in Second Language Learning and Teaching (2020), (SJR, Q2) or Language Teaching Research (LTR) (third version submitted), (JCR, Q1).

She has also collaborated with renowned scholars, such as Prof. Michael J. Leeser (The Florida State University, USA), a permanent collaboration that began as MA students in the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign (USA) where her interest on the area of LREs sprung, with subsequent publications in Language Awareness (2019) (JCR, Q2), or Porta Linguarum (2014), (JCR, Q3). She has also collaborated with Prof. Regina Weinert (University of Sheffield) an Ikerbasque visiting scholar from the University of Sheffield. They collected data from 3rd and 4th year Spanish-Basque bilingual students of English Studies. They contributed with their corpus to the Louvain International Database of Spoken English Interlanguage from Université Catholique de Louvain. Their work was published in Tesol Quarterly (2017) (JCR, Q1), or in Contemporary Approaches to Second Language Acquisition (John Benjamins, 2013 – the AILA Applied Linguistics series).

As for service, she has lectured on courses on technical English in a wide range of degrees, such as Architecture (2008-2010), Engineering (Civil / Mechanical / Electricity / Electronics / Chemistry or Construction) (2010-2012). She has also lectured on Foreign language didactics, Integrated Language curriculum, Methodology (2013-2016), English Language or Spoken English with a central focus on Phonetics (since 2017). She also teaches a course on Introduction to syllabus design and language teaching in the MA programme Language Acquisition in Multilingual Settings (<http://www.lams.ehu.es>), a course that attempts to bridge the gap between syllabus design and language teaching, and second / foreign language learning. It provides an overview of traditional methodologies and trains students in curriculum development in defining competencies, learning outcomes and curricular contents.

She has acted as a reviewer in Language Teaching Research, Language Awareness, International Journal of Bilingual Education and Bilingualism or ITL - International Journal of Applied Linguistics, and has been a guest reviewer for several papers and presentations at the AESLA or AEDEAN. She obtained the accreditation of PROFESOR CONTRATADO DOCTOR on 14th December, 2018, granted by Agencia Nacional de Evaluación de la Calidad y Acreditación (ANECA).
